

Teaser for Kevin Deane & Giuliano Russo seminar, Tuesday 18 May, 1.00pm Transcript

Lockdowns – they've been essential for stopping the spread of a deadly pandemic. But they can also cause damage, especially to the most vulnerable – as healthcare visits for other conditions fall away, non-priority treatments stop, children miss school and isolation adds to stress.

On Tuesday the 18th of May at 12.30pm, Kevin Deane of the Open University and Giuliano Russo of Queen Mary, University of London will present a major survey of lockdowns' health effects in lower and middle income countries - from studies of Covid-19 and previous Ebola outbreaks.

Their guest will be Fikile Dikolomela-Lengene, a primary healthcare nurse and campaigner in Johannesburg who has served on Ministerial Task Teams for nursing and health.

Join us online for this free event, hosted by the Open University.